Income support for Government Assisted Refugees (GARs)

A GAR is a person who resettles to Canada because they have been determined to be a Convention refugee. GARs receive financial and other support to help cover basic needs from the Government of Canada through the Resettlement Assistance Program (RAP) for up to one year after their arrival in Canada.

There is a high level of housing unaffordability for all B.C. residents. However, this is exacerbated for resettled refugees and CUAET populations as they face additional challenges such as finding employment, learning a new language and settling in a new country while managing culture shock and in some cases, trauma and mental health difficulties at the same time.

The income supports listed above are for food, shelter, transportation, communication allowance and other incidentals. However, these expenses as well as costs for utilities, internet, phone, clothing and other basic expenses are higher than the financial supports. Additionally, British Columbia's annual inflation rate grew from 7.3% in August 2022 to 7.7% in September 2022, the third-highest rate in Canada. Grocery prices have increased 11.4% in September 2022 compared to September 2021. The total average cost of utilities in BC is $156 per month, which includes electricity, water, internet and cable.

What is the Transportation Loan?

GARs in Canada must pay for their travel to Canada. The Canadian government offers resettled refugees the option of taking out a loan.

How does it work?

- The International Organization for Migration (IOM) organizes all pre-arrival services and travel to Canada.
- In the interim, travel costs are covered by Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) under the Immigration Loans Program (ILP) through the Transportation Loan.
- The loan can be applied to other costs including medical exams, travel document fees, services fees, and some accommodations / meal expenses while the individual is on their way to Canada.
- The loan must be paid back to the Government of Canada after the 12th month from when the loan was issued.
